'Tape of doom' in car tragedy

By MARTIN PHILLIPS

TWO young bank clerks found dead in a fume-filled car might have been victims of a deadly game of fantasy.

They died listening to heavy metal music – and fantasy magazines about death and black magic were discovered in the white Ford Capri.

There have been reports of deaths in America after heavy metal fans listened to doom-laden lyrics.

Detectives hope the tape will give clues to the tragedy of Iain Davidson, 18, and his friend Ian Swanson, 20. Both had girlfriends and they left no suicide notes.

Career

They worked at the same bank branch at Southend, Essex, and were thought to have good career prospects.

The pair had been to a club at Rayleigh, Essex, on Friday night. Their bodies were found at Southend next morning.

A hosepipe ran from the car exhaust through a side window.

A police spokesman said yesterday: "Both sets of parents are devastated.

"There is no apparent reason why the two should have deliberately killed themselves."

Detectives have ordered drug tests on the victims.

Brit girl flees to drug isle

A MYSTERY British woman said to have been involved in a drug smuggling plot has been freed by Thai police.

The woman – known only as "Ruth" – was told to leave the country for her own good.

She is believed to have fled to an island in the Gulf of Thailand, inhabited by thousands of drug-taking hippies.

She was thought to have been set to fly to Tokyo with Britons Sandra Gregory and Robert Lock, who were arrested at Bangkok airport.

Sandra, 29, a teacher from Sowerby Bridge, Yorks, is accused of having 150gm of heroin.

There was not enough evidence to hold "Ruth."

Kill Rushdie order stays

THE order to kill Satanic Verses author Salman Rushdie must be carried out, Iran's moslem leader decreed yesterday.

But the writer condemned it as a "terrorist threat" when he spoke at a service in Cambridge.

£1.8m conman and wife's ex-lover are pals

THE LIKELY LASS WHO FACES LIFE WITHOUT YUPPIE GUPPY

PALS: Guppy with best man Earl Spencer

Playful Trish loved nights on the town

EXCLUSIVE

By GEOFF SUTTON

YUPPIE conman Darius Guppy's wife was revealed yesterday as a playgirl who rapidly scaled the social ladder.

Patricia Guppy, 24, had a wild affair with nightclub bouncer Gary Pearn before marrying the best pal of Princess Di's brother Earl Spencer.

A bizarre friendship began between the conman – facing jail for a £1.8 million gems swindle – and the Geordie jack-the-lad.

And Old Etonian Guppy came to Gary's aid when the doorman was remanded in jail accused of supplying the drug ecstasy. He put up a £5,000 surety to free his wife's ex-boyfriend.

Factory

Patricia Holder went from working in a Sunderland clothing factory to becoming the wife of a toff in just five years.

During her remarkable rise, she flew Gary to Florida, Paris and the Canary Islands for holidays.

One beach snap taken on Gran Canaria three years ago showed her topless with him and another man.

Gary, 37, said: "She just loved showing off her body. She paid for me to go on holiday and we had a fantastic time."

He added: "When I first met her she had just got married to her childhood sweetheart Ian McLelland.

"But she didn't hesitate to be unfaithful to him.

"She was ruthless to Ian but was never down or miserable. She was a star in Sunderland."

But the town was not big enough for Patricia. She headed for the bright lights of London.

Gary, now jobless, said Patricia asked him to marry her several times. But he got a shock after seeing her off at Newcastle station one day.

He said: "We kissed each other. Next morning, all the lads were laughing and pointing at the paper.

"There was an announcement of her engagement to Darius. I went up the wall."

After a frosty tug-of-love Guppy and Gary became firm friends.

Rough

"Lord Spencer and Darius loved our rough-and-ready clubs – and all my friends loved them. They were a great contrast, these toffs and my Geordie mates."

Gary – who went to Guppy's wedding – denies conspiracy to supply a drug and will fight his case in May.

He said: "Darius and Patricia didn't hesitate to help me. I will never forget their kindness."

COPS HUNT MILLIONS

By DON MACKAY

REGIONAL Crime Squad detectives were last night preparing to jet to Zurich on the trail of Darius Guppy's hidden fraud cash.

They believe his £1.8million gems sting is just part of a £4million haul, from various crooked deals, held in secret Swiss bank accounts.

Guppy and business partner Benedict Marsh took out injunction after injunction to stop RCS officers probing into Zurich and Geneva accounts. They even appealed to the Swiss Supreme Court to stop British police in their tracks only days before going on trial for fraud.

Now detectives are awaiting permission from Swiss judges to try to trace the cash.

Detective Inspector Peter Avery said: "We will fly to Switzerland to take a look at the bank accounts just as soon as we get the go-ahead from the Swiss courts.

"I'm sure a close examination of the accounts will yield the clues we are looking for."

Branson is men's man

VIRGIN tycoon Richard Branson is modern man's role model – followed by TV traveller Michael Palin and soccer ace Gary Lineker. Their perfect women are Goldie Hawn, Cindy Crawford, Felicity Kendal and Princess Di, says a survey for She magazine.

TARRANT FOR BEEB

ZANY Chris Tarrant is switching sides to present a new prime time game show for the BBC.

He is to host The Main Event in which families taking part from home team up with studio guests via a special TV and computer link.

Contestants will take part in beat the buzzer rounds, observation games and try their hands at acting.

The show – the first of its kind in Britain – is likely to get a Saturday night slot, starting in April.

"It's going to be chaos," said Chris, 45, who has worked mainly for ITV.

"This show is so packed with games it's going to be hard to imagine what's coming next."
